CO-OPERATION OF COMMUNITY IS NECESSARY

(From Sunday's Daily.)

Perhaps no one other thing is so necessary and conducive to success in rural school work as community co-operation, and no teacher, however efficient she may be in knowledge and method, can hope to do her best without it. We hear the term used with various relations but to the teacher the foundation of co-operation is the realization on the part of the community that the school is an essential part of the larger community life and not a thing apart; that it is really the neighborhood's school and the pupil's school and not the teacher's school; and that it cannot reach its highest efficiency nor be as far-reaching in its influence without the interest and help of the community with the teacher as the leader.

Co-operation depends upon the spirit of the teacher, for every rural teacher will find responsiveness and co-operation eagerly given when she is able to command it by showing worthy qualities of leadership in herself. She must first become a part of the community, discover its needs, standards, and attitudes, and show herself willing to give full-hearted service by letting her interests, plans, thoughts, and influence extend beyond the actual hours spent in the school room. The teacher should have the ability to enter fully into the spirit and activities of the social life so long as she does not lower her own standards and violate her own convictions. She should know the children and parents in their homes, not making short calls as formal company, but in the spirit of sincere friendship, proving herself a co-worker for the upbuilding of the school and community. Under these conditions leadership will be readily granted by the teacher and she will find no need to complain that her efforts are unappreciated and her patrons unresponsive.

A great many communities are like little children—they are willing to go but they have to be shown the way. It is a great mistake on the part of the teacher to feel that the people of the community are too busy or too ignorant and untrained to assist in her schemes or projects. They may be at the outset but here is just another opportunity for the teacher to extend her influence beyond the school room. True, they may need to be shown, but how often in reply to a faltering request for help, has a teacher been surprised to receive in place of the expected refusal, the hearty response, "I'm not much at that sort of thing, but I'm willing to do what I can." Let the teacher show that she needs the help of the community; that the patrons are invaluable factors in the success of her work, and that without them she is as helpless as a captain without his soldiers. Let her never hesitate to be the leader for that is her duty and privilege and the community has as much a right to expect her to be the most potent influence in every good work connected with the life of the community.

But after all is said, the solution of the question still hinges itself upon the spirit of the teacher. For upon her all else depends. Caricature and equipment by the right hands. The teacher needs courage, devotion and unselfishness, as well as a knowledge of methods and facts. But above all she needs a world of enthusiasm and a love for attacking and overcoming hard conditions. In this connection it is well to recall Emerson's oft-repeated remark, that "Nothing great was ever accomplished without enthusiasm." Surely, securing community co-operation is "something great" and the rural teacher who has not yet gained this great asset, had best make it her first and foremost duty but let her first look at the end.

I tried most every kind of medicine, but none did me any good.

I read one day about Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I decided to try it. I had not taken but about six bottles until I was almost cured. It did me more good than all the other medicines I had tried, put together.

My friends began asking me why I looked so well, and I told them about Cardui. Several are now taking it.

Do you, lady reader, suffer from any of the ailments due to womanly trouble, such as headache, backache, sideache, sleeplessness, and that everlastingly tired feeling?

I so, let us urge you to give Cardui a trial. We feel confident it will help you, just as it has a million other women in the past half century.
